

The Heart of Service honors the "dedication, sacrifice and accomplishments" of community leaders and volunteers "who have made a difference in Jefferson County, who have made our communities a better place by doing extraordinary things for their neighbors, their community or the environment."

This is the fourth year for this annual award, sponsored by the Peninsula Daily News, Rotary Club of Port Townsend (noon club), Port Townsend Sunrise Rotary Club and the East Jefferson Rotary Club.

A judging committee selected the five Heart of Service recipients from nominations made by individuals, clubs, churches, businesses and other organizations.

"These five are truly local heroes, working to make community life stronger, tighter, happier, richer," said John Brewer, PDN editor and publisher.

"They represent the backbone of the community — busy people who always seem to be able to make time to offer a hand or a shoulder.

"And they may be people whose names many residents don't know.

"They don't give to our communities because they expect either reward or recognition."

The five will receive framed award certificates and heart-shaped medals designed by Steve Rafoth, president and CEO of Enclume Design Products in Port Hadlock and past president of the Rotary noon club.

The awards will be presented at a noon luncheon that begins in The Commons at Fort Worden State Park on Tuesday, May 12.

The luncheon is open to the public.

Friends and admirers of the recipients are invited to attend.
